Narration vs Description - What's the difference? | WikiDiff

It's hard to tell a decent story without describing characters, setting, and objects. Good storytellers weave description into their tales. Description is an important part of narrative writing. This makes writing a paper that is purely descriptive a bit awkward. We are used to seeing description as merely a part of a story. What's the difference between description and narration? Description lists the appearance, smell, mood, or other characteristics of something. Narration is the act of giving an account. Generally, third-person narrative allows the writer to comment on characters and events to...

Narration isn't just in literature, literary nonfiction, or academic studies, though. It also comes into play in writing in the workplace, as Barbara Fine Clouse wrote in "Patterns for a Purpose": "Police officers write crime reports, and insurance investigators write accident reports, both of which narrate sequences of events.

A narrative or story is an account of a series of related events, experiences, or the like, whether true or fictitious. The word derives from the Latin verb narrare, which is derived from the adjective gnarus. Along with argumentation, description, and exposition, narration, broadly defined, is one of four rhetorical modes of discourse. More narrowly defined, it is the fiction-writing mode in which the narrator communicates directly to the reader. Oral storytelling is the earliest method for sharing. Narration is the act of telling a story, usually in some kind of chronological order. Making up a scary ghost story and relating it around a campfire is an act of narration. Narration generally means any kind of explaining or telling of something. It is usually used in reference to storytelling.
